THE GREAT STRIKE OF '77.

Review of the Rioting and Pillaging of a Bloody Week—The Loss of Life and Money.

The great railroad strikes of 1877 were the first important strikes in America. Four years of depression followed the panic of 1873, and in that period the gross earnings of railroads fell from $526,000,000 to $497,000,000. The cause of the strike was a reduction in the pay of railroad employees. Millions in private and corporate property were lost, there were many deaths, and hundreds of thousands of laborers lost employment.

The strikes began at Martinsburg, on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, and within a week strikes had occurred on the Pennsylvania, Erie, Lake Shore & Michigan Southern, Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago, Cincinnati & St. Louis, Vandalia, Ohio & Mississippi, Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati & Indianapolis, Philadelphia & Reading, Philadelphia & Erie, Erie & Pittsburgh, Chicago, Alton & St. Louis, Canada Southern and some minor roads. No through freight was moved on any of these lines. Some roads refused to move any trains unless the government guaranteed safe passage to all.

On the 16th of July the firemen at Martinsburg, W. Va., left their work, and when other men offered to take their places drove them from their engines. The vice president of the road telegraphed to the governor for aid, and two militia companies were sent. A collision occurred between the troops and the rioters. Shots were exchanged and the troops withdrew. Governor Matthews then sent to Washington for United States troops and received eight companies. At this the rioters subsided.

The first success of the mob at Martinsburg caused other strikes. The day that the government troops left Washington a strike broke out at Keyser, Md., on the same road. Governor Carroll at once sent the Fifth regiment. Before it could leave Baltimore a ferocious mob attacked the soldiers, hurling stones and brick-bats, but the regiment with fixed bayonets marched steadily forward to the station. The Sixth was also called out, but before they could join the Fifth the rioters had increased to a mob numbering thousands. A collision occurred and the soldiers were obliged to fire into the dense, yelling mass.

THE RIOTS AT PITTSBURGH.

The day after the riot in Baltimore the men on the Pennsylvania struck at Pittsburgh. The alleged cause was a new order of the company requiring double trains to be taken out with only one crew of men; there was also the grievance of a reduction in wages. The strikers ran out the trains at Pittsburgh, took possession of the main tracks and stopped all trains. The Pittsburgh militia of three regiments was called out, but were useless. Troops were then called from Philadelphia. At Pittsburgh they were stoned. They fired and the rioters fled, but soon gathered. Gun factories and shops containing arms were broken into and 3,000 rioters marched down Fifth avenue with drums beating and flags flying, shouting curses on the troops and General Pearson, who commanded them. The latter meekly withdrew to the round-house, where they were instantly besieged amid loud yells of "Burn them! burn the wretches!" The round-house was fired, but then the mob became suddenly seized with panic lest the militia should turn their Gatling guns on them. The soldiers formed and marched out; they were fired on by the mob, and could make no headway against the living mass, but they succeeded in scattering it.

Sunday morning freight cars were burned, two round houses containing 125 first class engines were burned, besides machine shops, depots and offices of four companies, as well as the great Union depot on Liberty street. The firemen were not allowed to stir a step toward putting out the fire. Governor Hartranft telegraphed to Washington and United States troops were dispatched to Pittsburgh. At this the mobs dispersed. Riots occurred at Harrisburg and Reading, where again the local militia did nothing. Property was destroyed and lives were lost. Chicago was also the center of a furious mob movement.

For two or three years after the great railroad strikes of 1877 strikes were few. During the six years from 1880-1886 there were on American railroads 1,475 strikes, with an aggregate loss of 23,127 days of labor. Of these strikes, 1,050 succeeded. The pecuniary loss to employees was $2,093,494, while that to employers was $6,267,658.

PATTISON'S INCONSISTENCY.

Playing the Mean Demagogue in the Face of a Presidential Campaign.

Pittsburgh Commercial-Gazette.

Gov. Pattison's course in the Homestead trouble is so different from that which he pursued in the coke strike of 1891 that there is no way of reconciling the inconsistency other than on the conclusion that he is now influenced by politics. When the outbreak occurred between the Pinkertons and the workmen at the Morewood works in March, 1881, in which several workmen were killed, the sheriff of Westmoreland county telegraphed to the governor that the civil authority was powerless to restore order and preserve the peace, and urged that the militia be sent to the scene at once. The governor accepted the word of the Democratic sheriff of Westmoreland county as conclusive evidence of the gravity of the situation and promptly dispatched two regiments to the scene, where they were encamped for some weeks. The mere presence of the troops was sufficient. No further outbreaks occurred. People felt secure in life and property and the reign of lawlessness was temporarily at an end.

After the troops had been disbanded, the sheriff of Fayette county encountered the resistance in the discharge of his duties. The removal of the uniformed and armed guards emboldened the strikers and they beat and drove back the sheriff and his civil deputies when they undertook to execute the eviction writ. The sheriff telegraphed Governor Pattison the situation, and asked that the military be again called out. The governor accepted the word of this Democratic sheriff of Fayette county and ordered the captain of Company C of Uniontown to put his men at the sheriff's service. This company took quarters in the armory, and at the sheriff's call accompanied him to the different coveys of the county wherever resistance was offered. The result was that he was able to proceed with his official duties. The presence of the troops did not cause any blood to be shed, but it was the one thing that prevented bloodshed. The uniformed guard was a reminder of the supremacy of the law and the majesty of the commonwealth.

The situation at Homestead is far more serious than it was in the coke strike. Governor Pattison took the statements of the Democratic sheriffs of Fayette and Westmoreland counties as proof of the necessity of state interference to restore order and authority. He does not accept the word of the Republican sheriff of Allegheny county in a crisis where the law is worse trampled upon than it was in the coke region. On the contrary he sets himself up as a judge to impeach the sincerity and honesty of the sheriff of Allegheny county. He insists that the sheriff take up a posse comitatus, when he must know that such a step would not only be futile against the 4,000 armed strikers, but that it would provoke bloodshed and further loss of life. It is only to prevent this and to re-establish law that state aid is invoked.

Governor Pattison's course is so inconsistent that it is impossible not to believe that he is playing the demagogue in the face of the pending presidential campaign.

PROTECTION.

Is It Constitutional?—Some Facts of History.

The Democrats who drew the plank of the national platform denying constitutional authority on the part of the federal government to levy tariff duties for purposes of protection to American industries were doubtless ignorant of the fact that the men who made the federal constitution were largely instrumental in securing the passage of the first protective tariff law. That law, passed in 1789, was recommended by President Washington, one of the thirty-nine signers of the constitution, and the president of the constitutional convention. The act was not only recommended by Washington, but he signed it and made it a law. When the bill was before Congress it was warmly supported by James Madison, also one of the signers of the constitution, and it received the votes of fifteen other men whose names were attached to that document as follows: John Langdon, Nicholas Gilman, William S. Johnson, Roger Sherman, Robert Morris, Thomas Fitzsimmons, William Few, Abraham Baldwin, Rufus King, William Paterson, George Clymer, Richard Bassett, George Read, Pierce Butler, and Daniel Carroll. In that list are included the names of Roger Sherman and William S. Johnson, two of the most eminent lawyers of their day. Does anyone in the possession of his senses suppose that such men would help to frame an organic law for a great republic, and then stultify themselves by voting within two years, to violate one of its most vital provisions? Of course not. The right of the Federal government to levy protective duties has never before been denied, and it would not be denied now could the Democrats find a less bungling way in which to declare for free trade.

FINANCE AND TRADE.

The Features of the Money and Stock Markets.

NEW YORK, July 8.—Money on call easy at 1 1/2 to 2 1/2 per cent; last loan 1 1/2 per cent, closed offered at 1 1/2 per cent. Prime mercantile paper 3 1/2 per cent. Sterling exchange quiet but steady at $4 7/8 1/2. Sales were 156,275 shares.

The declines in a few stocks saved the trading from utter stagnation and gave what tone there was during the day. The leading feature today was the decline in the price of wheat, which was apparent selling for some time on the part of the foreigners in fear of a reduction or passing of the dividend. Apart from this there was no feature in the market except a decline of 1 per cent in sugar on light trading, all of which was recovered. The market finally closed strong at the best prices.

Railroad bonds quiet. Sales $1,283,000. Government and state bonds dull and steady.
